Module Overview
Additional Information	This module is intended to speak closely to our Programme Learning Objective relating to the teaching of diversity and race. In the module there will be significant aspects of our de-colonized curriculum, including the study of primary and secondary texts by authors from BAME backgrounds. This module introduces students to Liverpool as a global city with a rich cultural heritage. From the influx of settlers who have populated the city, Liverpool's continued engagement with its history of slavery, its maritime history, its mid twentieth-century primacy in both poetry and popular music to its regeneration into the European Culture of Capital in 2008, this module traces the vibrant creativity and multiculturalism which has, and continues to, shape this world-famous city. A selection of texts, from abolitionist poetry to drama, working-class autobiographies to modern novels, authored by, and about, Liverpudlians will be analysed to explore how historical, social and geographical contexts impact upon, and are impacted by, literature. In doing so, students will develop the core critical and contextual reading skills essential to successful study at University level. Module teaching will include literary mapping of the city, visits to Liverpool's renowned cultural institutions, seminars, workshops and a symposium.
