Aims

1. Demonstrate knowledge and understanding of biopsychosocial theories underpinning mental health nursing practice as it relates to the older adult.
2. Provide an evidence based rationale for the collaborative care delivered to a selected client's group and/or their significant others.

Learning Outcomes

After completing the module the student should be able to:

- 1 Discuss the relevance of demographic trends, socio-cultural, economic and political issues to the development and provision of collaborative services for the older adult and significant others.
- 2 Evaluate the relevance of biopsychosocial and cultural influences on the development of mental health problems and disorders in the older adult.
- 3 Identify and discuss the mental health problems which may be experienced by the older adult and their actual/potential effects on their carers (formal and informal).
- 4 Evaluate the evidence base for current collaborative practice bases for the nursing care and the provision of physical and psychosocial treatments/therapies for the older adult and their significant others.
- 5 Utilise an evidence base to reflect on their collaborative involvement in the provision fo care and treatment for a selected client group and/or their significant others.

Learning Outcomes of Assessments

The assessment item list is assessed via the learning outcomes listed:

Essay	1	2	3	4	5
Essay	1	2	4	5

Outline Syllabus

Overview of biopsychosocial theories, demographic trends and political, economic influences on the development, care and treatment of mental health problems and mental disorders in the older client group. The effects of mental disorders on the older adult and their carers (formal and informal). Roles and responsibilities of nurses and members of the multidisciplinary and inter-agency teams in relation to collaborative practice and effective care coordination for the older client group. Carers Act, National Service Frameworks for Older People, Relevant current policies and legislation

Learning Activities

Lectures. Directed work and enquiry strategies. Seminars and individual tutorials. Self-directed study. Student participation in a variety of negotiated and directed/supervised learning activities to enable them to develop their portfolio of evidence in relation to collaborative care provision for a selected group of clients and/or their carers. Formative assessment will involve an on-going and reflective review of their portfolio of evidence and group supervision activities to enable them to identify current achievements and future learning needs for successful completion of the module and successful participation in future modules.

Notes

The module facilitates the students' further development of knowledge and understanding of the relevance of nursing and allied sciences' theories as they relate to collaborative care provision for the older adult and their significant others. It also underpins the concurrent practice based module, to enable their achievement of professional competencies and academic outcomes in relation to their future collaborative practices as a mental health nurse.
