Aims

1. To provide students with a knowledge of the main areas of psychology in application.
2. To facilitate a placement setting where students can either observe or participate.
3. To discuss the use of transferable and psychological skills in the applied setting.

Learning Outcomes

After completing the module the student should be able to:

- 1 Analyse, assess and evaluate the roles and skills of relevant professionals working in an applied setting.
- 2 Conduct an oral presentation based on the placement experience
- 3 Write a report linking psychological theory with practice.
- 4 Keep a field diary of placement experience.
- 5 Reflect on personal development as a result of the placement experience.

Learning Outcomes of Assessments

The assessment item list is assessed via the learning outcomes listed:

Outline Syllabus

Psychology in areas of application (clinical, occupational, community, educational); Preparation for placement and transferable skills.
Placement: one twenty hour placement chosen from areas of clinical, educational, industrial, organisational and community settings.

Learning Activities

Several areas of applied psychology are introduced by a professional in the field. The placement (minimum of 20 hours) may require a wide variety of activities. The module is delivered through lectures and small group teaching. The students will have a number of self assessment and self reflection opportunities. Each student will give a short seminar presentation to a small group of peers and produce a report based on their work placement.

Notes

This module discusses psychology in application. It aims to raise students' awareness of various career paths and opportunities in psychology. Students complete a minimum of twenty hours in an applied setting. The work placement presents an opportunity for each student to obtain experience in a professional area. Students must complete the necessary paperwork prior to the placement - this is a requirement of the module and credit will not be released if the paperwork is not in order.
