Aims

Introduce students to the key roles of various non-state actors such as International Organisations, Non-Governmental Organisations and Transnational Corporations. Develop an understanding of how such actors are structured and how this impacts policy making and engagement within the international system. Introduce students to theoretical perspectives such as new institutionalism and neoliberal institutionalism, alongside theories such as realism, liberalism and Marxism, to understand how these organisations have developed and how they behave.

Learning Outcomes

After completing the module the student should be able to:

- 1 Analyse international organisations and their roles in international politics.
- 2 Relate IR theories to the roles and behaviours of international organisations.
- 3 Critically engage with primary and secondary materials in their analyses of international organisations.

Learning Outcomes of Assessments

The assessment item list is assessed via the learning outcomes listed:

15 minute presentation	1	2

Notes

The module will explore the roles and relations of international organisations through a thematic approach. This will allow students to engage with key organisations focussing on broader themes of international politics, such as aid and development, health, security and the environment. This approach will allow students to engage with core debates and explore the roles of a multitude of organisations.
