This module equips students with the knowledge and skills to research, design and pitch a public information campaign for a 'live' client. The campaign itself is produced for the purposes of assessment but the task asks them to display the sort of transferable skills associated with professional practice in persuasive communication. The workshop sessions will be used to provide support for campaign groups as they move through the research, design and pitch phases of their campaigns. Guest speakers will be used to further develop the work-related focus of the module.
