Module Overview	This module will enable you to develop a comprehensive understanding of urban capitalism and its alternatives from a critical sociological perspective. The module splits into two parts. Part I provides a critical understanding of how capitalism organises everyday urban life and everyday living. Part II examines the nature of the struggles that have taken place to find new ways of living more equitably and sustainability. Specifically, it looks closely at alternative modes of thought (such as anarchism and environmentalism) about social and economic organisation, as well as examples of alternative modes of living in the UK and globally.

The first consists of a workbook based on a series of readings about urban capitalism and its alternatives. Students will complete this each week in preparation for seminar discussions which can then be used as a feedback / feed forward opportunity that will assist them in finalising their workbook; students will receive summative feedback on the content of their workbooks based on their ability to verbally discuss its contents in seminars. The second assessment builds on the first assessment by asking the students to produce a group podcast discussion of alternatives to urban capitalism that they have learned about through their reading. Students are expected to undertake some additional research on the alternatives in question in completing this assessment task. Approximately 10-20% of the course will be delivered 'off-site' so that students can interact with, and learn from, radical activists.
