Aims

The module aims to develop a student's critical appreciation and understanding of different policing jurisdictions and the agencies that work within them. The module will examine International Legal Instruments and evaluate their strengths and weaknesses while taking account of broader issues such as Human Rights. The module examines the contributions research informed knowledge has, and continues to make to the development of criminal justice practices and encourages students to think critically about policing, community safety and criminal justice from international and transnational perspectives

Learning Outcomes

After completing the module the student should be able to:

- 1 Compare and contrast policy, procedure and practice developments in different policing jurisdictions
- 2 Compare and contrast how different policing agencies operate within, across and between these jurisdictions and evaluate the strengths and weaknesses of the arrangements that are in place
- 3 Critically explore the potential of research informed policy developmental work to shape future practice within policing, community safety and/or wider criminal justice provision from an international and transnational basis
