Aims

This module is designed for students with some experience in security, policing, maritime industry, as well as for those with no such experience. It thus assumes a position of no knowledge from the student.

Aims:
1. To identify and explain key concepts of port and maritime security together with the policing of ports and ships

2. To encourage students to reflect upon the contribution of port and maritime regulations, policy, practices and challenges posed by transnational crimes, piracy and maritime terrorism
3. To encourage students to recognise the diverse and contested nature of port and maritime security, and its geopolitical and global economic context.

Learning Outcomes

After completing the module the student should be able to:

1	Identify, explain and analyse the regulatory framework of the port and maritime security industry, the roles of international and regional organisations, regulatory bodies and maritime trade bodies
2	Identify, explain and analyse the important role of port and maritime security in the global geopolitical economy
3	Identify, explain and analyse the different security threats to ports, ships and other relevant transport modes and hubs.
4	Identify, explain and analyse transnational crimes connected with the maritime domain, piracy, and maritime terrorism, as well as the appropriate security and policing initiatives that are designed to counter these
